

INSIGHTS

Spring 2017

Inside...

- 3 Market update
- 4 Use your SMSF to teach your kids about finance
- 6 Can you afford for your adult kids to live at home?
- 7 Struck by a smooth criminal

Welcome

In this edition of Insights magazine we take a look at how you can use your SMSF to educate your children about finance.

BT Financial Group Investment Specialist, Riccardo Briganti, provides us with a market update on local and international markets.

We also look at if you can really afford for your adult kids to continue to live at home.

Finally, we share some tips on how to spot scammers.

Until next time happy reading.

---> Do you love what we do? Refer a friend, colleague or family member who may benefit from our services. For all new clients referred (who proceed with our advice), you will receive a gift as our 'thank you'.

TAG Financial Pty Limited

02 8884 7444

info@tagfinancial.sydney

tagfinancial.sydney

facebook.com/TAGFinancialAustralia

linkedin.com/company/tag-financial-pty-limited

Market update

BT Financial Group Investment Specialist Riccardo Briganti brings you our latest market update on both local and international markets, from overseas tensions to the RBA cash rate.

The trend in global equities has been largely positive all year with some hiccups along the way. The latest pullback from record highs occurred in August in response to an escalation of tensions between North Korea and the US, although markets recovered some losses when a more diplomatic approach was seen to replace the brinkmanship being pursued by the countries' leaders. Australian equities have been less robust and have largely trended sideways since May when a new bank levy was announced in the Commonwealth Budget. Broader concerns about the composition and rate of economic growth have also weighed on Australian equities.

Global growth data has been mixed recently with some indicators improving while others have retraced from recent highs. For example, Purchasing Manager Indices (PMI) which measure conditions in the manufacturing sector have eased back slightly from elevated levels in most regions. In the US, the PMI had been at its highest level since 2014 in June at 57.8 but fell slightly to 56.3 in July. This still suggests the US manufacturing sector is in a strong expansion mode. Other regions saw a similar pattern but the UK PMI has had a different profile, dipping lower in May and June in response to election uncertainty, but rebounding somewhat in July.

Moderately improving economic activity, the falling unemployment rate and signs that inflation pressures were building saw the US Federal Reserve increase the target range of the fed funds rate by 25 basis points to 1-1.25% at its June Committee meeting. However, recent data suggests inflation is more subdued than expected. The US consumer price index increased by 1.7% in the year to July, calling into question the pace of further US interest rate rises while European inflation has stalled at about 1.3% suggesting the European Central Bank is likely to leave official rates unchanged at zero for the foreseeable future.

In Australia, there are signs labour market conditions are improving. In particular, whereas previously employment growth was largely concentrated in part-time work, recent data suggests full-time employment is improving. This is an encouraging sign that business confidence has reached a level where employers are happy to again employ full-time workers, rather than taking a cautious approach with part-time employees. On the downside, wages growth remains anaemic. In the 12 months to June, wages increased by only 1.9% compared to average wages growth of 3.3% for the previous five years. This lack of income growth, coupled with other uncertainties, has seen consumer confidence deteriorate in recent months.

Commentary from the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) that the neutral official cash rate was likely to be around 3.5% prompted some to expect a rate hike from the bank in the near future and saw the Australian dollar spike higher. The RBA tried to correct any misinterpretation of its comments as implying higher interest rates in the near future and there is little in recent economic data to suggest an impending rate hike. We believe the RBA will leave the official cash rate unchanged at 1.5% for at least the remainder of 2017.

Use your SMSF to teach your kids about finance

With self-managed super funds (SMSFs) permitted to have up to four members, it may be a surprise for some to learn that approximately 70% of SMSFs have only two members and about a further 23% only have one. Which means that only 7% of funds have three or four members.¹

If you consider that most of the two member SMSFs are likely to be 'mum and dad' funds, and single member funds often arrive when one of the original two members has passed away, it begs the question – where have all the children gone?

While it's always an important personal decision to set up and start your own SMSF, and an important decision as to who else you want to be in the same SMSF with, there are a couple of important elements you could consider in deciding whether to have your kids join your fund or not. Most of these would apply to your children who are at least 18 years old, but there can be some aspects that are important for younger kids as well.

The first is the opportunity to teach your children more about finances and the importance of managing your money. One of the reasons you're likely to be in a SMSF is because you want control, and with control comes responsibility. In fact one of the most important facets of being in an SMSF and being a trustee of your own fund is that you are ultimately responsible for the operation of the fund. As much as you can, and probably should, outsource certain aspects to professional SMSF advisers, but ultimately the decisions rest with you.

Having your children involved in managing their finances and being responsible for the decisions they may make (both legally as well as personally) is a great way to make them more accountable for their saving and investment decisions. And if they can do that in the safety of an SMSF environment where they have you as co-trustees, hopefully the disciplines can also spread to their other financial decisions outside of the SMSF environment.

While having children under the age of 18 as members of the SMSF is allowed, they can't be a trustee and usually the parents will assume this responsibility for them until they are of legal age. However, it doesn't mean you can't start to include them as part of the process so they learn.

The second aspect to consider is around cost. For many younger people, superannuation isn't a huge consideration as they don't have much of it. Generally their employer sends the compulsory super guarantee off somewhere, often to a default fund, and in most cases the member hasn't really chosen how to invest their super or understand what costs are involved. It's an issue for later in life. The issue is, in a low return environment, the costs of their current super environment could actually work against them as it means they could have less super working for them. And over the long term, that could make a difference.

But if they join your SMSF, is there the possibility that their costs will fall? Whilst studies have said you may need somewhere between $200,000 and $500,000 in an SMSF to make it economically viable compared to a non-SMSF environment², don't forget this is for the total amount across all members, rather than per member. If you are already paying a set fee for the administration of your SMSF, will there be much of a change by adding a new member?

Third comes the opportunity for diversification. Members with low balances are often forced to use a default investment arrangement and share risk and return with thousands of other members, simply because they don't have enough to be able to build their own personalised investment portfolio. In an SMSF, while they may not have enough for their own portfolio to begin with, there may be a greater level of control and understanding by pooling their super with yours to create a bespoke investment portfolio.

The last aspect to consider is around estate planning. If your children are of an age where you have appointed them as executor to your will, when you pass away your children will have the ability to step in (as your legal representative) to administer the distribution of your super savings held through the SMSF.

To help reduce the burden this can place on your loved ones at that time, introducing your children earlier to your SMSF can make a significant difference as they will have a better understanding of where your super is, how you want it dealt to, how the fund operates and decisions that need to be made.

Running an SMSF is not easy, but neither is gaining an understanding of finance and the decisions that need to be made at different stages in life. If using your SMSF and the guidance of your professional adviser is an option to get your kids' financial future on track, isn't it something worth considering?

Having your children involved in managing their finances and being responsible for the decisions they may make (both legally as well as personally) is a great way to make them more accountable for their saving and investment decisions.

1. ATO SMSF statistical report June 2016
2. ASIC SMSF report 442 (information sheets 204 & 205)

Can you afford for your adult kids to live at home?

Parents with adult children still living at home have the best of intentions to help their kids get ahead, but they might be putting their own financial futures at risk.

At the time of the 2016 census, almost 400,000 non-dependent children aged 25 to 34 were living at home¹, an increase of 20 percent from five years earlier.²

Why the increase?

Record high levels of house prices and rents³ and a challenging job market⁴ are two factors keeping kids in the parental home longer. Also contributing are the trends for young people to participate more in higher education, marry and have children later.⁵

Kids paying their way

Gold Coast solicitor, Ashley Bennett and his retail merchandiser wife, Julie have two daughters, Hayley, 24 and Lauren, 22. Both daughters have paid around $100 per week board since they left school and started in their first jobs. In the past, when Hayley's boyfriend lived in the Bennett home, he paid board as well.

Though $100 is more than some of their friends pay for rent and board, the money doesn't come close to covering expenses.

Dave Taylor has noticed the impact on his water, gas and electricity bills with his son Joel back in the home: "Even the shopping – it's incremental, it's so many little things that you don't really notice creeping up on you, but then when you sit back and look at the accumulation of cost, you do go 'wow'."

The burden for parents

Though they get along well as a family, Julie Dowling says her girls have never really pulled their weight around the house. Often Julie says it's easier to "not sweat the small stuff" and do household chores herself instead of nagging.

On top of the increased burden of home duties, there can also be an impact on parents' accumulation of retirement wealth.⁶

"You're subsidising them, there's no two ways about it," Ashley Bennett says. "I don't think about it much, but I have no doubt it will affect the money we have to retire on."

Nibbling away at your retirement

While Dave Taylor loves having his son at home, he's occasionally tempted to ask Joel for the rent he'd actually be paying for the kind of property they live in. "And then that money could go towards superannuation or paying the mortgage off sooner," Dave says.

"But then this other bit kicks in which is the paternal instinct and you go, he's my kid and I want the best for him," says Dave.

How to keep your retirement dreams intact

There's no reason why parents can't help their kids by letting them stay at home into their 20s and even their 30s, and at the same time, prepare for their retirement.

It's just a matter of having a plan in place that ensures you're not overstretching yourself. A good first step is to speak to us so we can together figure out how you can support your kids while still protecting your retirement nest egg.

1. Australian Bureau of Statistics, 2016 Census Community Profiles. A 'non-dependent child' refers to a natural, adopted, step or foster child of a couple or lone parent usually resident in the household, who is aged 15 years and over and is not a full-time student aged 15-24 years, and who has no identified partner or child of his/her own usually resident in the household.
2. Australian Bureau of Statistics, 2011 Census Community Profiles.
3. Parliamentary Briefing, Housing Affordability.
4. Parliamentary Briefing, Employment – Measuring and improving outcomes for young Australians.
5. Australian Bureau of Statistics, Australian Social Trends, Young adults: then and now – April 2013.
6. Australian Bureau of Statistics, Home and Away: The Living Arrangements of Young People – June 2009.

Struck by a smooth criminal

You wouldn't hand over your money to just anyone. Of course not! The truth is though, sometimes scammers can seem legit and know just what to say and show you to break down your barriers.

Better technology means they're getting better at it and the Australians who lost a combined $23.6 million to investment scams in 2016 would testify to it¹.

So how can you protect yourself from a slick scammer?

To start with, it helps to understand how you could be scammed and what type of scams there are.

According to the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC), there are three main types².

1. Fictional investment offer

Much like it sounds, the scammer will try to get you to invest in something that doesn't exist and just take your money. They try to get you in the door by making the investment sound amazing.

2. Real investment offer – but your money doesn't go there

The scammer will contact you about a genuine investment – for example, an IPO, and offer you their own way to access it. Or offer you a limited time discount to access the investment. While it will appear like your money is going towards that investment, it's just headed straight into the scammer's bank account.

3. Fake claims to represent a well-known company

The scammer may just lie – or they may have a company that uses a name close to or identical to a reputable business to trick you into thinking they are one and the same. They might have slick websites and brochures too. For example, it has become fairly common to see emails claiming to be from your bank these days.

Here are some tips to ensure you don't fall for these types of scams –

1. If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

If someone is promising you large returns that you couldn't easily earn elsewhere, think carefully – how are they actually able to generate those returns?

2. Do your research

Get on google and look up the products. Ask for their ABN and Australian Financial Services Licence (AFSL) – and be concerned if they don't have this.

Check the ASIC website for lists of scam companies, and also check in with scamwatch.gov.au.

3. Reputation might be worth the price

If the investment is genuine – but you're not sure the person offering it to you is – it is worth looking at investing through companies that you know are reputable and have the correct licensing to offer you the investments.

4. Diversify and start small

Even genuine investments have risks and it's worth spreading your money across a variety. Think the old adage about eggs in one basket – if you are going to lose money, you don't want it to be everything.

5. Financial advice

If you aren't sure about an investment, it might be worth speaking to your adviser and asking them for their opinion.

Think you are getting called by a scammer?

Make sure to report it so you can help prevent someone else being scammed – you should also follow this step if a scammer has taken your money. You can report scams to Scamwatch at <https://www.scamwatch.gov.au/report-a-scam>

1. ACCC Report – Targeting Scams: Report of the ACCC on scams activity 2016, May 2017 https://www.accc.gov.au/system/files/1162%20Targeting%20Scams%202017_FA1.pdf

2. ASIC Moneysmart <https://www.moneysmart.gov.au/scams/investment-scams>

Disclaimer

This publication has been compiled by Magnitude Group Pty Ltd ABN 54 086 266 202 AFSL 221557 (Magnitude) and is current as at time of preparation, August 2017. Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance. Any outlooks in this publication are predictive in character. Whilst every effort has been taken to ensure that the assumptions on which the outlooks given in this publication are based are reasonable, the outlooks may be based on incorrect assumptions or may not take into account known or unknown risks and uncertainties. The results ultimately achieved may differ materially from our outlooks. Material contained in this publication is an overview or summary only and it should not be considered a comprehensive statement on any matter nor relied upon as such. The information and any advice in this publication do not take into account your personal objectives, financial situation or needs and so you should consider its appropriateness having regard to these factors before acting on it. This publication may contain material provided directly by third parties and is given in good faith and has been derived from sources believed to be reliable but has not been independently verified. Magnitude is not responsible for such material. To the maximum extent permitted by law: (a) no guarantee, representation or warranty is given that any information or advice in this publication is complete, accurate, up-to-date or fit for any purpose; and (b) neither Magnitude, nor any member of the Westpac group of companies, is in any way liable to you (including for negligence) in respect of any reliance upon such information or advice. It is important that your personal circumstances are taken into account before making any financial decision and we recommend you seek detailed and specific advice from a suitably qualified adviser before acting on any information or advice in this publication. The tax position described is a general statement and is for guidance only. It has not been prepared by a registered tax agent. It does not constitute tax advice and is based on current tax laws and our interpretation. Your individual situation may differ and you should seek independent professional tax advice. © Magnitude Group Pty Ltd 2011. BTSCB13814B-0817ab